

121
SHARES

0
COMMENTS

EAT AND DRINK

NYC restaurant products to eat at home: Roberta's, Rao's and more

By Melissa Kravitz melissa.kravitz@amny.com April 27, 2016

The best part of the NYC dining scene? Never having to leave your house.

Put down the takeout container and admit it: You like staying in once in a while. Or always. It's fine!

New York restauranteurs are on your side.

With bottled sauces and spices from some of NYC's top-rated kitchens, you don't need to vie for a coveted reservation or fight over the end-of-meal bill: It's all on you.

Grab these groceries from NYC restaurants, or have them delivered, and feast like you're out on the town straight from your couch.

ADVERTISEMENT

ADVERTISE HERE

The Meatball Shop's Classic Tomato Sauce

Chef Daniel Holzman of The Meatball Shop released his Classic Tomato Sauce for mass consumption in April 2016. The homemade red sauce is made with only eight ingredients: Italian whole peeled tomatoes, fresh onions, olive oil, salt, garlic, bay leaves, oregano and a pinch of red pepper. It's perfect for soaking your homemade meatballs in, stirring with pasta, making pizzas and adding to whatever you need to make saucier. 24-ounce jars retail at $7.99 at local Whole Foods stores, TMS restaurants and at themeatballshop.com.

(Credit: Liz Clayman)