Here's Everything Awesome to Eat on Super Bowl Sunday

By Audrey Bruno

Blue Ribbon's fried chicken is always a good choice.

No matter how you feel about deflated footballs, this year's Super Bowl Sunday will, no doubt, once again prove to be one of the most wonderful eating days of the year, especially now that some of New York's best restaurants are in on the game. There are plenty of stellar takeout options, or, if you're planning on going out to watch the game, many restaurants and bars will have it on while offering specials. Here's a comprehensive list of where to go and what to eat:

Where: The Meatball Shop

What: The Chelsea location is screening the game and offering a $45 Bucket 'o Balls that includes 25 balls of any meat, paired with any sauce. (It's also available for pickup at any of the other locations.)
