

WINGS AND THINGS

Throw the Ultimate Super Bowl Party with Fare from These 8 NYC Restaurants

No matter what happens on screen, you'll be the MVP of your football-watching party when you unveil an amazing food spread courtesy of one (or more) of these snack-happy eateries

January 15, 2014, Carey Jones

Google+ 0

Share

Like

Share

249

Tweet

4

While everyone else's Super Bowl parties on Feb. 2, 2014, might have microwave nachos and from-the-jar salsa, any self-respecting New York food and sports lover will be pulling out all the stops for a day with such snacking potential. Thankfully any number of excellent NYC restaurants will help you with that, ensuring that your Super Bowl spread vies for attention with the game itself. Massive hero sandwiches with a side of meatballs? We've found 'em. Restaurant-quality tacos and margaritas? Absolutely. Deep-fried wings to blow all other wings out of the stadium? We've got those, too. Behold our top eight spots to source Super Bowl snacks that go well beyond a bag of potato chips. Make sure to set up your order ahead of time as it's gonna be a busy day — and these amazing feasts take some prep time.

Bucket of meatballs at The Meatball Shop (Photo: Courtesy of The Meatball Shop)

Meatballs from The Meatball Shop

While the shop's takeout menu no longer calls its large-scale meatball order a Bucket of Balls, that's still what it's called in our hearts. Any of The Meatball Shop's standard offerings — beef, spicy pork, chicken, or veggie meatballs; with tomato, spicy meat, Parmesan cream, mushroom gravy, or pesto sauces — are available as a bucket (sorry, package) of 36 or 80 meatballs; sides (including pasta and polenta) are available, too, as are meatball sliders with a little extra notice. And pick up a few dozen cookies for dessert; they're made in-house and just as memorably tasty. Multiple locations in Manhattan and Brooklyn, themeatballshop.com