

Super Bowl XLV in NYC: eat/drink guide

Where to order in, or party down, from Hill Country to Maialino

By Jeremy Berger
Special to Metromix
January 31, 2011

There is a school of thought that says that the Super Bowl is about getting your bros together at the best apartment, picking up a few 30-packs of Bud and assembling a tray of nachos so large it requires Jenga-like precision to dismantle. But let's be honest: This is NYC. We're out a home team in the big game (REX!), and there are restaurants and bars serving some pretty ridic fare—heritage pork ribs, Buffalo chicken meatballs with Frank's Red Hot, Kreuz Market sausages. The Super Bowl is all about the super binge. We've sorted through your options for going out and staying in.

Takeout

The Meatball Shop

Intensely pedigreed chef Daniel Holzman is turning his attention toward a game-day classic: Buffalo chicken balls with blue cheese and Frank's Hot House, served with buns and available to go by the Bucket "O" Balls (25 servings). Order 24 hours in advance. (84 Stanton St., 212-982-8895)