

WHY I WRITE / EXAMPLES

The reason I write is because I can escape reality, which, to me, is important because I rarely feel useful. Apart from making people laugh and socializing, I don't contribute much to society. When I write, I feel like I'm making art, similar to the same feeling artists have when they make music, or when painters create visuals on a canvas. In a way, it makes me feel good, and it doesn't matter whether my story goes beyond the hands of my professor or teacher because it can definitely show people my perspective on life around us.

I write to remember all the stories that wander in my head. I write to express my personality and express who I am. I write to get away from the dangerous reality that surrounds our communities. I write to create my own story that I will enjoy and for others to enjoy, as well. I write because I can make anything come to life.

I love to write because you get to come up with anything. You can write about what you like. You can even express your feelings. Writing is something that is very common in life. You will be writing for a long time. You can create anything. You can write a story about monkeys, or a person, or maybe your favorite place to go. I mostly enjoy writing scripts. I never really wrote a script before, but it seems really fun because you get to come up with a story and come up with the characters and words.