

Meatballs To Survive The Winter

by Carolina Santos-Neves

on 01/10/12 at 03:00 PM

We've talked about how there will be a lot of slow-cooking happening this winter. But let's not forget that there will be tons of meatball making and consumption during the cold months ahead. I mean, talk about comfort food! Yummy!

The great thing about meatballs is that you can make a whole batch and then freeze them for a month or so. So, if you're eating for one, you can heat a few up; if you're having people over, you can heat up more than just a few.

In fact, this weekend for the Golden Globes I have every intention of making The Meatball Shop's classic beef meatballs. Then come the Super Bowl, I have every intention of assigning every party attendee a meatball recipe from our Super Bowl Meatball Story. Let the countdown begin.

Do you have a favorite meatball recipe?